3-4 June 2014 | ODI-Leeds, Munro House, Duke Street, Leeds, LS9 8AG
part of the Global GovJam, 48 hours to rock the public sector

Be part of a global event

Global GovJam applies tools and techniques of service design to the world of government and the public sector. Working around a common theme, small teams meet at multiple locations for 48 hours to prototype innovative approaches to challenges faced by the public sector. At the end of the two days, they upload their results and publish them for the world.

For anyone and everyone

Do you have an interest in public services and making them better? We have interest from people working in local authorities, the NHS, national government departments, as well as the private and voluntary sectors. What they all have in common is a curiosity to try new ways of working together around public sector opportunities and issues.

Learn by doing

Your team will collaborate rapidly in designing and testing solutions to public problems. You'll get more than great new ideas and service design methods: by the end of the event you will have the experience of co-creating a working prototype.
